Not Stopping, Just Flying Over

These ID posters only include species you can see in the park but our neighbour has told me there are ravens in the trees beyond the pony field on the slope of Shotover. They may well be flying over.

Unusual? Thought you had to go north, to the Cornish coast or the Tower of London to see ravens? But no, you can see them all over the British Isles bar the eastern side of the UK and all year round.

Mainly breeding in the west and north but are currently expanding their range eastwards and if you spot one, Thames Valley Environmental Records Centre (TVERC), would be pleased to hear about it.

Corvus Corax largest of the crow family, all black with a large bill and long wings identifiable in flight with its diamond-shaped tail.

Other flyovers

Flocks, or rather colonies, of gulls wish they would carry out their noisy squawking just to make us feel closer to the sea!

A pair of noisy Canada geese.

And look out for herons as well.
