

Wild Flowers

There were bluebells the woodland during May last year but this year there were more but earlier in April

And my poor photo!

There were Spanish bluebells in the woodland as well!

Half of the world's native bluebell population is found in the UK.

Native bluebells are typical of ancient woodland, flowering before the leaf canopy appears.

Spanish bluebells crossbred with our native bluebells to form a fertile hybrid diluting the unique characteristics of our native species.

Concerns are growing that this hybrid might eventually out-compete our native species.

Native bluebells are protected by law.
